The idea that you can say a lot in a small given area somehow has always intrigued me, and this seems to be one of the principal guidelines in my work.

— Ed Ruscha

METRO NEURO (2022) belongs to Ed Ruscha's 'word paintings' which highlight how the interplay between words and images reconfigures their meanings. A key figure in Pop Art and Conceptual Art, Ruscha has been exploring the uncanny nature of ordinary language since the 1960s. Using a crisp typography, a muted colour palette and a sense of cinematic detachment, METRO NEURO turns the everyday vocabulary of the city into a poetic meditation on urban identity. The theme of the metro reflects the artist's fascination with his hometown of Los Angeles as both subject and symbol – a city of constant motion, anonymity and visual rhythm.
